In his 2009 documentary film “House of Numbers”, Canadian filmmaker Brent Leung interviewed almost all influential personalities in HIV/AIDS research, from the discoverers of HIV up to the people affected. He gives voice and counter voice a chance to speak without censorship and summarizes at the end of the film: “There are tests that prove nothing, medicine that kills and statistics, that are manipulated to absurdity. 90 % of HIV positive people worldwide live in areas with distinct poverty and misery. It is ludicrous, but while we were pursuing the wrong murderer (the HIV virus), an assassin that is constantly changing, the real murderer has probably been hiding in plain sight, as bright as day and unchanged since the beginning of mankind.
