

Charlie Hebdo: Who benefits from Islamic terror?

Zusammenfassung / summary:

What seemed to have been unthinkable 25 years ago has now become reality. There are new tensions between the religions in Europe. With the terrorist attack on Charlie Hebdo in Paris, the atmosphere against Islam is continuously fueled in our countries. This is intentional. At least this is what experienced analysts such as Middle East expert Christoph Hörstel or best-selling author Gerhard Wisniewski say.

Sendetext / broadcast text:

Ladies and Gentlemen,

What seemed to have been unthinkable 25 years ago has now become reality. There are new tensions between the religions in Europe. With the terrorist attack on Charlie Hebdo in Paris, the atmosphere against Islam is continuously fueled in our countries. This is intentional. At least this is what experienced analysts such as Middle East expert Christoph Hörstel or best-selling author Gerhard Wisniewski say. In an interview with the Iranian broadcasting corporation IRIB that happened to take place 10 minutes before the terrorist attack in Paris, Wisniewski explained who pulled the strings 25 years ago to create the whole Islamic-terror movement. He pointed out that strategists at the US Pentagon were looking for a substitute bogeyman after the end of the Cold War. The Soviet Union had fallen apart, but the US arms industry and the politicians needed a new enemy to keep the people under tension. Therefore, strategic planners, such as political science professor Samuel Huntington, then created the idea of the "clash of cultures". They declared religious terror to be the future enemy. In 1993, all of the sudden, the very first Islamic-terrorist attack on American soil was conducted. Such a thing had never been known before. With the bombing attack on the World Trade Center in New York the new enemy was impressively introduced and ever since 9/11 became the main reason for wars about oil and resources in Islamic countries.

But strategic planners like Huntington suggested Islam as the new evil for both religious and cultural reasons.

Wisniewski explains it as follows: "They want to get rid of this culture that strongly insists on conservative values such as the family and so on." In context with the attack on Charlie Hebdo, Wisniewski also refers to numerous inconsistencies.

For Middle East expert Christoph Hörstel also there is hardly any doubt that the assassination in Paris was a terrorist attack managed by secret services. In an controversial interview with the Russia Today Germany, which will be shown right after this broadcast, he explains the arguments in detail. It is now generally important to be careful; to restrain from out-of-hand accusations against Islam and to remain level-headed. Those who really fuel the clash of cultures and benefit from it need to be exposed and acted against. A clash between civilizations never serves the people but those who want to divide and rule it. Wisniewski warns: "A Europe united against Islam is exactly the cornerstone for an empire of American rulers just how the USA envisions it." With this in mind, we now highly recommend to you the interview of Russia Today Germany with Christoph Hörstel. Have a good evening. ##

Quellen / Sources:

<http://info.kopp-verlag.de/hintergruende/deutschland/gerhard-wisniewski/charlie-hebdo-gruendungsakt-eines-totalitaeren-europa.html>

<http://info.kopp-verlag.de/hintergruende/deutschland/seyed-hedayatollah-shahrokny-irib-/interview-wie-der-kampf-der-kulturen-geplant-wurde.html>

Autor / Author: ss.